Get instant access to complete contact information for your fellow PDMI members. The PDMI membership roster will be updated and deployed quarterly to all member companies – and also is hosted in the member-only area of the PDMI website.

ADVOCACY

Serve on PDMI Councils

Volunteering to become a member of a PDMI council is its own form of advocacy – for yourself, for your business, and for the industry as a whole. The PDMI's councils – including the Workshop Council, U.S. Hispanic Council, Government Affairs Council, Brand Response Council, E-Commerce Council, and Women's Council – provide a starting point for members to get more involved and for the PDMI community to hear your voice.

Government Affairs and Self-Regulation

From data security and privacy to the FTC's latest initiatives, it's important to stay abreast of government rules and regulations that affect your business. With the assistance of the PDMI's staff and its Government Affairs Council, PDMI members will not only stay on notice of the latest news but also will be able to voice their concerns on legal and regulatory programs affecting today's business environment. We believe that a proactive, self-regulated community is a healthy, progressive, and smart community. The PDMI promotes principles of ethical business practices, accountability, and transparency to advance the industry on a level playing field.

PDMI PAC

Give back to the industry in the most important way: to lobby for a better business environment for all performance-driven marketers. The PDMI's planned political action committee (PAC) will serve as a non-partisan, transparent fund that helps ensure our members' voices are heard on Capitol Hill, in statehouses, and with regulatory leaders.

EDUCATION

Free Subscription to PDMI Publications

Stay on top of key trends, leading research, and crucial buzz with a free subscription to Results Magazine, the PDMI's quarterly publication, as well as our e-newsletter, PDMI Weekly.

Access to Information from PDMI Research Partners

The PDMI works with industry research leaders to provide members with exclusive facts and figures and in-depth analysis of current and future trends across the marketing landscape.

Exclusive Access to Post-Event Education Audio/Video

Miss an educational session at a PDMI in-person event? Audio or video of all PDMI event educational sessions is available to PDMI members in the member-only area on the PDMI website.

Exclusive Online Educational Events

Led by our Workshop and Brand Response Councils, PDMI members create, deliver, and attend regularly scheduled online educational workshops, including our Seasonal Seminar Series and Take 20 webinars – which are archived on the PDMI's YouTube channel.

PDMI Newswire

A new campaign for your brand? Successful sales results for your product? Other big news? With PDMI Newswire, members stay in front of readers of PDMI Weekly and Results Magazine by gaining preferred placement of approved press releases.

PDMI Web Exclusives

Thought-leadership opinions? Marketers with a success story? Suppliers with a case study of their service working wonders for a clients' campaign? PDMI Web Exclusives allow members a special opportunity to share their expertise and educate fellow members.

COUNCILS

Becoming a member of a PDMI Council is its own form of advocacy – for yourself, for your business, and for the industry as a whole. The PDMI's Councils are an excellent starting point for members to get more involved and for the PDMI community to hear your voice. Council members will further their leadership experience while also becoming directly involved in setting the PDMI's course. Six PDMI Councils are now open for membership. Click here to inquire about serving.

WORKSHOP COUNCIL

Launched in summer 2019, PDMI's Workshop Council is designed as an incubator for peer-to-peer education among PDMI members and the performance-driven marketing industry at large. Members of the Workshop Council band together to discuss and select the best available concepts for a series of monthly webinars to be conducted by and hosted PDMI members.

BRAND RESPONSE COUNCIL

Launched in spring 2020, the PDMI's Brand Response Council brings together media outlets, media agencies, and the clients both serve to build more powerful consensus and relationships across various mediums.

GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS COUNCIL

The PDMI's Government Affairs Council, formed in fall 2019, follows all regulatory developments affecting the performance-driven and direct-to-consumer marketing industries. The Council weighs in on behalf of members where and when it's deemed appropriate by PDMI staff and members. Its members will also highlight important information in PDMI publications on various regulatory and legal developments at the federal, state, and local levels.

HOLA!

U.S. HISPANIC COUNCIL

The PDMI's U.S. Hispanic Council, which debuted in summer 2019, is designed as a forum for leaders in performance-driven marketing to share their expertise on one of the industry's most important growth areas: the U.S. Hispanic consumer. As this demographic grows and continues to influence more and more campaigns, the PDMI understands how crucial it is for its members to grasp the differences — and similarities — in marketing to this burgeoning marketplace.

BUY NOW

E-COMMERCE COUNCIL

The PDMI's E-Commerce Council, launched in summer 2021, focuses on all topics related to consumers shopping on an e-commerce platform. Why are they there? How did they get there? How will they transact? And how can the merchant not only close the sale, but maintain them as a customer? Members of the council are merchants, platform builders and hosts, and vendors — all share an expertise germane to the expanding e-commerce world, from payments to conversion metrics to fraud concerns, and more.

WOMEN'S LEADERSHIP COUNCIL

The PDMI's Women's Council, launched in winter 2023, provides a forum for women in performance and direct-to-consumer marketing to create, learn, and grow; and a trusting community for leaders at every level to share their expertise, build partnerships, and create a vision for the future of performance marketing. The council creates content for the PDMI's educational outlets and offers a peer-to-peer mentorship program, allowing younger industry executives to learn from experienced leaders.

THE DIGITAL DASHBOARD

Testing: The Offer Must Come First
By Greg Silvano

It was mid-2020, sales of his at-home fitness product were through the roof, and Jon had a problem. A manufacturing error meant he had to raise his price from $129 to $134, and he dreaded the impact the higher price would have on sales. With no options left, he increased the price and waited for the inevitable dip in his conversion rate. It never came. Telling the story now, Jon confides had he tested the $134 price point earlier he would have made an additional $300,000 for the year.

Successful direct response campaigns and the companies who run them have one thing in common: the testing never stops. Testing isn't just something you do in desperation to rescue a failing campaign; it is just as much about finding its maximum value.

Testing in direct response

The next tests aimed to increase the AOV with a series of upsells and downsells, focused primarily on a newly introduced "deluxe" upgrade upsell. In just weeks, the marketer was able to triple its conversion rate (to a sustained 20 percent) with an AOV just 10 percent lower than the initial test (when the offer was twice the price).

This experience demonstrates another lesson: it's important to leave time and budget for testing. The offer, script, and website at launch may be an educated guess based on years of experience — but it is still a guess. Should the price be $5 more, $10 more — or $3 less? You won't know unless you test, and that takes some time.

Maybe you've expanded your campaign to new audiences. Maybe there's new competition, and you need to test an updated message that acknowledges them. Maybe the social landscape has changed, and your message should reflect that. Maybe there's a seasonality aspect: 2020 was not 2019, and 2021 will surely not be like 2020.

Test your marketing copy, your imagery, your layouts, and — especially — your offer. The difference between a losing or winning campaign could hinge on something as simple as an "Are you sure?" downsell.

Today, you can utilize one of many available online testing tools — ones that would thrill the likes of Hopkins and Ogilvy. Here are some quick tips to get started:

- Only test one thing at a time. Change the price or the shipping-and-handling (S&H) cost, but not both. Change a headline — but not the order button text.
- A good rule of thumb is to run a test until you get 100 orders per variant. Ending a test before then will reduce its statistical accuracy.
- Keep a log of ideas to test in the future.
- Keep notes on each test's expected results. Why did you run the test? What were you hoping would happen? What is the difference between each test variant? You'll want these details when you review your tests months and even years later. **■

THE MEDIA MIX

The More Things Change, the More They (Mostly) Stay the Same

By Ron Stobla

There is an early 18th-century inn, situated on Main Street in Stockbridge, Mass., whose first-floor bar is entirely wallpapered with newspaper pages from the 1890s. If one were to relax with friends and take a few minutes to read the 125-year-old newspaper ads, you would be at the beginning of our story.

The American painter and illustrator Norman Rockwell lived the last quarter-century of his life in this western Massachusetts town. And while opinions vary on the significance of his artistic output, one thing is clear: he depicted many situations with topics that showed how we were more similar than different.

What else is the same and different from more than 100 years ago? Maybe surprisingly, like Norman Rockwell showed, things are more similar than they may seem.

In Tested Advertising Methods, John Capels presents a case study where — more than a century ago — a marketer did an A/B split. A product was marketed for 10 cents and $1 shipping vs. $1 for the product and 10 cents shipping. The former offer won because at that time, nobody cared how much shipping cost. We all can agree that Amazon Prime has changed that attitude.

Some product categories have shifted, too. There is a print ad from the 19th century that has the headline: “Makes children and adults as fat as pigs.” We definitely do not push that category any longer. And while print advertising is still alive and well, it is certainly no longer the de facto medium of the day.

Marketers today are often nervous about change, and it is easy to understand why. The platforms we market on have always been in a state of flux; however, instead of sea changes occurring every five to 10 years, it’s as if we’re seeing major shifts every six months.

Looking at the range of change in just my nearly three-decade career, I have marketed in mail-order catalogs, in Sunday newspaper supplements, in credit-card billing inserts, and then TV, the internet, and now various e-commerce platforms. Layering on to that, as recently as 15 years ago, most direct-to-consumer marketers weren’t so worried about the back end (which was, at that time, mainly big-box retail), and I was testing TV commercials with only phone numbers and no URLs!

But what has stayed the same? Most categories advertised in the 1890s are in line with the successful direct-to-consumer ads we see today. One headline reads, “Does your husband snore?” There have been dozens of snoring aids marketed in our industry in the past couple of decades.

Another product marketed 125 years ago was a “Chin Reducer and Beautifier.” We have seen a successful product marketed recently in the same category. Sanitized tape worms were marketed to be eaten to help lose weight. And while the methods may be modernized, from Tae Bo to P90X to Nutrisystem, Peloton, and beyond, weight loss and fitness remain evergreen categories.

There are always the “put hair on” (balding cures) and “take hair off” categories, which are plentiful at every point in our recent and distant marketing history. And, as previously mentioned, the platforms by which we reach our consumers seem to be changing rapidly and frequently, but the underlying “how” is still the same.

Our marketing principles and fundamentals are as similar today as they were six months ago, as they were five or 25 years ago or even 125 years ago: an answer to a mass market problem, a unique solution, and a great value. As Norman

Rockwell once said, “Very interesting for an old duffer like me to try his hand at something new. If I don’t do that once in a while, I might just turn into a fossil, you know!”

Change is good and change is healthy — it’s what keeps us going. And as long as we keep applying what we know works, focusing on what the customer responds to, and learning the nuances of new marketing channels, direct-to-consumer marketing will undoubtedly still be here in another 125 years. ■ people were worked. Although agencies offer a new way to successfulness is to invest ers promoting other and to goals. Leaders find ways to that community, whisper; you can’t pass a note. Winking? That’s a lost art that was a staple of deliberately conveying a message or an informal approval.

All the above leads to the question: How has videoconferencing affected outcomes? Data is not yet available on specifically how the Zoom, Teams, and WebEx platforms — among others — will affect business in the long term. When it is available, it already may be too late to shift.

And at what cost? Finding ways to develop successful team sharing of each other’s ideas requires collaboration, trust, commitment, and productive output. There are new technologies that offer the management of what is defined as momentum — that is, finding what works just a step above instant messaging, where team building and idea sharing is coupled with crowdsourcing.

At the end of the day, leaders still must put listening models in place. Team members need to feel heard, and leaders must encourage honest and timely communication. Accountability must be instituted. And when this fails, how does conflict resolution occur? Is it a fault of leadership, employee apathy, or this new teleconference culture? As if the loss of whispering and winking weren’t enough, leadership must find supportive measures for team members who need help navigating the trade-off of working outside the physical office. Many employees say they work 24/7. Others work less because they are in their home environment and tend to multitask with household chores, responsibilities to their children, and other activities of daily living. “Do what you need to do; just get your work done,” seems to be an acceptable idea now when it never was before.

Although team leaders can’t wink or whisper compassion and encouragement, they can (and must) keep relationship building a priority and make sure communication is driving successful outcomes. ■ through knowledge-sharing, which can only provide success if implemented instead of failing forward.

One of the positives of working in a teleconferencing world is it allows participants to share facial expressions. In a world where masks prohibit smile sharing, it is important that video conferencing allows for emotional bonding.

What this mode of business doesn’t allow, however, are the more private moments of understanding, or the immediate appreciation of an idea or suggestion — you can’t Simplifi, a leader in programmatic advertising and agency management software, has acquired PDMI member CareMedia Systems, a leading provider of performance media management software used by major performance marketing agencies, media agencies, and brands. This acquisition enables the two companies to deepen their existing integration, which allows agencies and brands to buy and analyze linear and connected TV (CTV) advertising together, along with other forms of programmatic advertising including addressable, mobile, video, display, native, and social. The combined company will serve more than 1,500 advertising agencies and media buying organizations and employ more than 500 team members. With the acquisition, Simplifi adds to its Advantage end-to-end agency workflow solution, enabling advertisers to automate more of their operations and improve the performance of their advertising. "The combination of Simplifi and CareMedia is as natural as it gets, with a common independent of agency base and offerings that now include both linear TV buying, performance, and attribution, as well as all forms of programmatic including CTV and more," says Glenn DeKraaker, CEO of CareMedia. "Simplifi's unstructured data set is the foundation for our joint, best-in-class omnichannel solutions."

Conductor Productions celebrates a great 2021, during which it expanded its capabilities and added to its list of clients. In the past 12 months, it has created performance campaigns for Fanatics, Hammacher Schlemmer, PureTalk, NutriSystem, SmartBiz, and Toyota. In addition to performance campaigns for Fanatics, Conductor Productions added brand retail creative, as well. With the new addition of Masterclass to its list of clients, Conductor also has added long-form production to its capabilities. In addition, the company welcomed Margie Sullivan as executive producer, Liz Vanzura as chief strategist, Jess Biancardi as production manager, and Christian Kapoukranidis in account services and business development.

Cannella Media DTC welcomes Chris Brombach as senior vice president, integrated media, and Andrew (Andy) Calver as senior vice president, analytics. Brombach brings a multitude of skills and more than 20 years of experience from both agency and client roles, spanning from brand response marketing to DTC marketing. During the past 15 years, Calver's experience includes building out numerous data science departments and driving innovation in the ways that organizations ingest, store, report, and visualize data.

Family Entertainment Television, Inc. (FETV) announces the launch of FMC — Family Movie Classics — on DISH Network, a fellow PDMI member company. The 24/7 classic movie channel is now available to nearly 9 million DISH subscribers. "This is a very proud day in our company's history," says Drew Sunruff, president and CEO of FETV. "We continually strive to bring good, wholesome entertainment to American families. FMC is a major step toward achieving that goal, and with DISH as a launch partner, the future is very bright for this network."

Hybrid Media Services celebrates its 15th anniversary. Kevin Mannix, president/CEO of the direct response radio and digital audio agency, gives credit for Hybrid Media's success to a dedicated and innovative team that's "always focused on the client's success and getting the job done every week." He adds, "Thank you to all of our amazing clients and vendors who have helped Hybrid achieve its phenomenal success and reputation over the past 15 years."

Weigel Broadcasting, owner of MeTV, announces the launch of Story Television — the company's sixth over-the-air broadcast network. Beginning March 28, it will showcase compelling historical factual programming, including riveting series such as Bio

Men Who Built America, Worl in HD, Modern Marvels, Mani Story of All of Us, and many more available for the first time on television. The network will be nationwide on the broadcast stations of Weigel Broadcasting and other affiliate partners.

E-commerce landing page platform rebrands as Buyist. "It's the same company, same energy, but we own a new name," wrote Gregory Silvano in an announcement to existing clients. "We look forward to showcasing how Buyist will be higher than ever with new features, storefronts, our own default processor, and new digital we. You'll be able to build entire sites visually — code-free." The corporate website can be found by visiting buyist.com.

LeadsRx celebrates the four-year anniversary of its partnership with Cumulus Media/Westwood One, America's largest audio network — the first national audio broadcast network to use LeadsRx Attribution™ and LeadsRx Journey™ performance marketing software. It powers Westwood One's analytics and attribution to measure the business impact of advertising campaigns and advertising creative for its advertisers. "The last few years have seen a tremendous amount of positive change in the audio industry's ability to measure itself and to prove advertising impact for national brands," says Pierre Bouvard, chief insights officer for Cumulus Media/Westwood One. "For years, marketers have been asking, 'Can I quantify if audio ads, whether streaming, podcasts or radio, can drive search and site traffic?' It wasn't possible until LeadsRx came on the scene — now we can confidently measure the impact of audio ads and tie them to business results."

NordVPN® selects PDMI member Bluewater to lead its U.S. media planning and buying efforts. The announcement comes after an extensive agency evaluation for a media agency of record to support future growth and brand-building initiatives, including TV and radio strategy, media planning, channel optimization, and a strong analytical approach. NordVPN is widely recognized and acclaimed by the most influential tech sites and IT security specialists as the absolute go-to in internet security. As NordVPN aims to expand connections in a diverse customer landscape, Bluewater will play an essential role in connecting customers with the brand through its omnichannel media solutions. "We wanted a media agency with a 'can-do' business attitude and mindset, and Bluewater is exactly that agency. With their vast media experience and expertise, they will be a great partner to help us reach our goals with a data driven approach to our direct-to-consumer advertising by being dynamic and responsive," says Viktorija Baltrūnaitė, senior global offline project manager at NordVPN.

PDMI Weekly will be on hiatus next week. We will return to your inbox on Wednesday, April 27.
